While the traditional services of tax, accounting, and auditing continue to dominate most CPA practices, technical complexity is accelerating. In addition, many CPA firms are experiencing staffing pressures as senior managers and owners approach retirement. The related risks to your practice aren't always easy to identify. Now more than ever, it's important to be well-informed on current practice management approaches to malpractice risks, and to ensure that your professional staff has the tools needed to safely navigate through day-to-day client service challenges.

That said, you manage an extremely busy schedule and finding a convenient time to complete this training and fulfill your annual CPE requirements is a challenge.
