As criminals become more sophisticated, has your crime coverage kept pace?

A decade ago, crime involved a robber walking into a bank with a weapon. Today, criminals do not necessarily use weapons—they use computers. Cybercriminals hack into your system, monitor your emails, then impersonate you to fraudulently convince an unsuspecting employee to wire transfer large sums of money to them.

Owners typically trust the people working for them. Embezzlers don’t look and act like bad people. However, the major perpetrators may include your own employees. Unfortunately, most people convicted of employee fraud schemes appear to be good people—who make bad decisions.

Crime, Fraud and Employee Theft Statistics

- 15% of fraud cases are discovered by internal audits¹
- 22% of employee theft claims cost more than $1 million¹
- 43% of cyberattacks target organizations with less than 100 employees²
- 91% of attacks by cybercriminals start through email³

Crime claims at CPA Firms

- The engagement partner at a CPA firm embezzled over $1.5 million from multiple clients over several years. The theft was revealed when a client noted an unusual balance on a statement.⁴
- An accounting firm made wire transfers amounting to $192,000 in response to email requests that appeared to be from a client.⁵ In reality, they were from a criminal that had taken control of the client’s email account.
- A “star” associate brought a wealthy elderly client to a firm, and then proceeded to write unauthorized checks to herself. The thefts were discovered by the client’s heirs after her death.⁴
